303 12th Street NW

Back in 2010 James and Jenny moved from Los Alamos to Albuquerque. They were planning to buy land and build a new house, but then they drove around the downtown neighborhood and saw this beautiful older home. So instead of building new they purchased 303 12th Street. They have been busy with the landscaping and have begun work on the interior to restore some of the character that the original builders seemed to have in mind. The white picket fence around the front was added along with the dark shutters to accent the windows.

The Robertson House

Named for John Robertson who owned the house between 1919 and 1962, who was president of the Farr Sheep Company and the Sanitary Sheep Board. The house is basically a two story cube with fine Greek Revival details on the porch and on the interior as well. It is one of the few in Albuquerque houses to feature Greek Revival elements.
