

Tamara Coombs & Chan Graham

1100 8th Street NW

After an absence of 26 years we moved back to Albuquerque in 2011 into this small house on 8th Street NW in the Downtown Neighborhoods.

Tamara Coombs

2013 in Albuquerque

Tamara was elected to the board of Amigos de la Sevilleta (a friends group for the National Wildlife Refuge) and spent a week, as a representative of Sevilleta, at the National Conservation Center in West Virginia. She contributed a chapter to the Guide to NYC Urban Landscapes describing the creation of Freshkills Park on Staten Island that started out as the largest landfill in the country. The book was published by Norton.

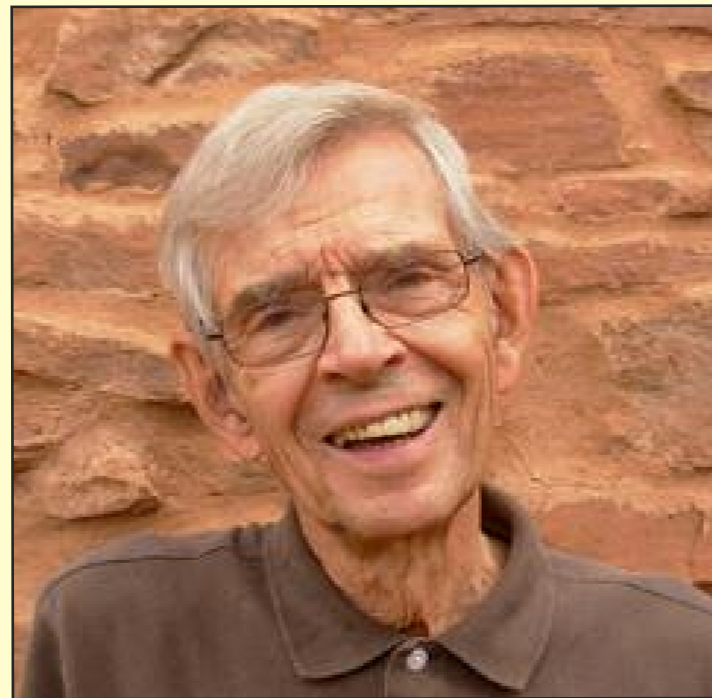

Chan Graham

2013 in Albuquerque

Chan took on two major projects in 2013. He was project director for the DNA History Project, which is what this presentation is all about.

He also designed and laid out a 230 page book for Barnett Shepherd, an historian in Staten Island, New York, that Chan had worked with over the years. The book, STATEN ISLAND SCENERY, Paintings, Prints and Photographs, 1679-1900 was published by the Staten Island Historical Society and the Staten Island Museum.

Chan Graham

Channell family gatering 1937, Jackson, Ohio

I am in the center front of this photograph barefoot, holding a box of crackerjacks. My dad, Archer Graham is directly behind and my mother, Zella (Channell) is to his right. My aunt Acy to my right is holding her baby David Oder, who died this year (2013) of a heart attack.
