215 12th Street NW

This is the J. H. Coons house, listed on both the State and National Registers of Historic Places. In this case, it is unfortunate that the house is titled for its first owner, as the house was owned by architect George Clayton Pearl who made major changes to the interior and built additions to the house that can be best described as modern yet contextural.

Remodeling the house:

The house could not have a better owner than Bob Yuhas. A retired Sandia Labs engineer, he revels in the spaces left by George Pearl including the kitchen with its walnut faced drawers and counter tops and the master bedroom with its irregular shape and windows.

Bob is a collector of art and artifacts that appear all through the house. Many are housed in the two story library that was built by George Pearl with a movable step ladder access to the high shelves.
